1. An officer of the Soviet Air Force [redacted] declares that the Soviets have a means of countering enemy radar. He spoke only in general terms and without precise details.
2. He said: "Soviet aircraft have a built-in sending device that puts so much energy into the receiver of enemy radar installations that the reflected waves are lost."
3. In answer to a question as to what would happen if the enemy used the same method, the officer said that the Soviets possessed a method of imposing a tone on the short wave apparatus, so that it could be told whether the object was approaching, receding or at rest.
